14. Read the following passage carefully.

There is one thing that is yours alone, which no one else can have and that is the pattern of your finger-prints. You leave your finger-prints behind when you touch anything. The Chinese were the first people to realise this. So they used a thumb-print instead of a signature on very important documents. A signature can be copied but a thumb-print can't. In the late nineteenth century, the real importance of finger-prints became known. A man called Sir Francis Galton began to study the ridges on the finger-tips. He found that no two people had the same pattern of ridges. He also learnt that the pattern does not change as a person grows older. The police saw at once how finger-prints could help them. They began to keep records of the finger-prints of people, who were known to be criminals.

Once, there lived a king. He was extremely fond of hunting. His ministers, very often, advised him not to kill innocent animals. The king did not pay heed. One day, a lion attacked him. He struck the lion with his sharp arrows. The lion was seriously wounded. Before falling dead to the ground, he struck the king's right arm with a great force. Half of the flesh of the arm was peeled off. The royal surgeons amputated the arm to save the king's life. The king grumbled against fate. He cursed God.

After two years, the king went out hunting. He lost his way in the thick forest. Some wild people caught hold of him. They were in search of a man to offer him as a sacrifice to the Forest God. The head priest saw the king. He said to his people, "The man is not worthy enough to be given as a sacrifice. He is not, complete in body. He has no right arm. Leave him". The people left the king. Then the king realised that the loss of his right arm had saved his life. He thanked God. He did not hunt again in his life.

16. Read the following passage carefully.

Hibernation is more than sleep. It is a very deep sleep.

In warm countries, where the winters are not very long or very cold, hibernation is not necessary. And in very cold parts of the world, like the far north of Russia, not many animals hibernate; the ground is so hard that they cannot make a deep hole to spend the winter in. But animals in large part of the northern hemisphere spend every winter fast asleep.

They go to sleep in all kinds of places. Red squirrels disappear inside trees, bears used caves, frogs go deep under the mud and very many other animals dig tunnels in the earth. Some animals sleep under the snow. There is a lot of air in loose snow, and this helps to keep the cold out.

Some warm-blooded animals like the cat, the dog or the wolf, do not need to hibernate. They lead an active life which keeps up their usual body temperature even in very cold winter weather. But for a cold-blooded creature such as a frog or a snake, it is a different matter. When the air temperature is below freezing, the creature's blood temperature drops too; it cannot move about in the usual way. And then it has no choice. It must simply lie down and sleep.
